Location Facts

Jönköping, in Småland, the central region of southern Sweden, is close to everything. The area is well known for its engineering skills and its entrepreneurial spirit and has long-standing business, commercial and communication traditions. With a population of approximately 120,000, Jönköping is one of Sweden's ten largest cities. The business environment is dynamic, diverse and successful with small to medium-sized companies as well as large international companies, such as IKEA, Husqvarna/Electrolux and SAAB. The region is also known as a communications hub, well known for transport and logistics, as well as for data- and telecommunications.

Academics: The School of Education and Communication offers courses in Media and Communication Studies and Teacher Training as well as Swedish language for beginners, taught in English, for students from its partner universities. Education at Swedish universities is based on the principle that students take responsibility for their studies, with support from the teaching faculty. Teaching takes different forms, such as lectures, seminars, group work, laboratory work, independent study, etc. Libraries and computers can be found in every department and are free of charge.

Winthrop students are required to take Swedish Language, Culture and Society I (6 credit hours), and, depending on major, students choose an additional three courses (3 credit hours each), totaling 15 credit hours for the semester abroad.
